DO YOU ever wake up in a panic, not sure what to wear to work? We're sure you do.

Do you ever enter your office building, stare at your reflection in the mirror, and ask yourself if what you're wearing is appropriate for the office? You should.

Take a look around you and you'll notice that more and more ladies are wearing clubbing fashion to the office, instead of corporate attire. Power dressing has been overshadowed by sexy.

Or maybe they just haven't met Audrey Quek.

Quek, an image consultant and former beauty queen, recently launched her own clothing line called Executive Label, a collection that's priced reasonably and mostly custom-made.

We attended her launch last week and were impressed by the line's elegant design and clean construction -- some echoing the silhouettes of a classic Coco Chanel three-piece outfit.

Quek says she has been wearing her own design for a few years now, and clients have inevitably been asking her where she got them. So she decided to start her own line. The fabrics are bought and sewn in Hong Kong, and she designs it herself.

Together with Executive Label, Quek also launched her first book , ABC To Your Dream Job.

Now that you're all dressed up for success, the next step is to cinch that dream job.
